Dorex Weekly Gold Markets Update – 24.11.2025

Inflation Outpaces Global Gold Production

JP Morgan Chase reports that newly mined gold adds less than 2% to global above-ground gold stocks each year.

CPI inflation across OECD economies was reported at 4.2% in April 2025.

“This can only lead to one outcome,” said Dorex’s CEO, John Kochanski.

“India’s gold imports reached a record US $14.7 billion in October - nearly triple the same month last year - widening the country’s trade deficit to over US $41.6 billion,” Kochanski said.

Spot gold traded at around US $4,083.60/oz last week marking a 2.1% decline, but remaining ~59% higher year-on-year, reflecting strong safe-haven sentiment amid inflation and macro uncertainty.

“According to the World Gold Council (WGC), central banks added a net 1,045 tonnes of gold in 2024 - the third straight year above 1,000 t - more than double the 2010-21 annual average of ~473 t,” Kochanski continued.

“A recent WGC survey shows that 95% of central banks expect global gold reserves to grow over the next 12 months, and 43% anticipate increasing their own holdings,” he said.

In Q3 2025 alone, central banks reportedly added ~220 t of gold, up ~10 % year-on-year, reported The Economic Times.

In a further milestone, Gold overtook the Euro as the second-largest central-bank reserve asset (after the US dollar) in 2024, The Financial Times reported citing European Central Bank (ECB) data.

“The dynamics of the global gold market last week underscore a widening gap between constrained supply and inflation-driven tone in the market, and sustained central bank and sovereign demand,” said Dorex’s CEO.

“Together, these factors continue to reinforce gold’s strategic position in global markets and personal portfolios.”
